Special National Library Week programs from the Northeast Regional Library system include Dulcimer club recitals at the Ripley and Iuka branches and "Lives Transform", a program at the Baldwyn library that will feature people from the community telling how they have transformed their lives in a variety of ways.

Several branches have partnered with BancorpSouth's Community facilitator to present programs for adults on "Budgeting" (the George E. Allen Library in Booneville) and "How to Save" (Iuka). In addition at the George E. Allen Library, they will also have a children's "How to Save" program.

Special demonstrations during the week include juicing, Microsoft Word and e-materials at the Iuka branch, canning and freezing, homemade laundry detergent and homemade mosquito repellent at the Burnsville branch and various digital media, e-readers, resume writing and essential oils at the Ripley library.

Other special events include Matthew Newcomb, a collector of Indian Artifacts, who will display and discuss his collection at the Burnsville library and an artist visit/author signing with Kathy Bryant Williams at the Corinth library. Corinth will also have a performance from the Crossroads Poetry Project, a group of local residents who read and perform poetry.

At the Belmont library, members of the Tishomingo County Emergency Management team will talk to and register residents for CODE RED, a new weather alert system.
