Online Journal of Health Ethics Volume 2, No. 1

The Online Journal of Health Ethics is pleased to announce the addition of an associate editor to our editorial board and several new members to our board of reviewers. Please join me in welcoming:

Associate Editor:

Janie B. Butts, D.S.N., RN is Associate Professor at The University of Southern Mississippi School of Nursing in Hattiesburg, Mississippi. Dr. Butts and co-author, Karen L. Rich, have a 2005 nursing ethics textbook published with Jones and Bartlett Publishers titled Nursing Ethics: Across the Curriculum and Into Practice. Included in her publications are numerous journal articles and book chapters regarding ethics, her research, education, and community health nursing. She reviews manuscripts for several journals and book companies. Specific research interests include HIV/STDs prevention and adolescents, the ethical implications that are involved when teaching prevention education to adolescents, virtue ethics, and communitarian ethics. Teaching includes classroom and online nursing courses at the doctoral, masters, and baccalaureate levels, which include bioethics, virtue ethics, ethics and critical thinking, current issues, and professional nursing practice. Currently, Dr. Butts serves as a guest member on the ethics committee of a large county hospital in Gulfport, Mississippi. Dr. Butts doctoral degree is from the University of Alabama at Birmingham with an emphasis in nursing education and nursing science, and her master's degree is from the University of Mississippi at the Medical Center, Jackson, with an emphasis in adult health nursing and nursing management.
