It cannot be denied that Judy Blume has had an indelible impact on children’s and young adult literature over the past four decades. Her books have sold over 80 million copies, been translated into 31 languages, won countless awards and been adapted to all manner of media. Her popularity is often attributed to her realistic yet compassionate discussion of topics relevant to her target audience. That these books are still popular to succeeding generations of readers attests to this. Her frank content and language, lack of moralizing or prescribed solutions disturb some; however, Judy’s ability to normalize the feelings of her characters, as well as those of her readers, irrevocably raised the bar for writing realistic fiction for children.

Judy’s writing career began with publication of The One in the Middle is the Green Kangaroo (1969) about a middle child who feels invisible stuck between his older brother and younger sister. Iggie’s House (1970) was next, and Are You There God? It’s Me, Margaret (1970) soon followed. By the mid-1980s she had produced more than 15 books and become one of the most recognizable names in literature, but the recognition was not always favorable. During this same time her books became some of the most contested titles for children in American literary history. Publication of Margaret gave Judy her first taste of censorship. The principal at her children’s school would not allow copies of the book in the school library because it discussed menstruation, and an unidentified woman phoned her home and called her a communist. (What the connection between Margaret and communism was, Judy admits, she never quite understood.) During the 1970s efforts to restrain access to books were scattered and isolated, but in the 1980s attempts to stifle not just her books, but any book deemed potentially troublesome, became organized and dogged. Many of Judy’s titles, including Then Again, Maybe I Won’t (1971); Deenie (1973); and Blubber (1974) were challenged, some on such vague accusations as having a ‘lack of moral tone.’ When her editor pressured her to change text so as not to draw ire, Judy decided it was time to take a stand and speak out against censorship. With the support of Judith Krug of the ALA Freedom to Read Foundation and the National Coalition Against Censorship (NCAC), she became an active voice in the fight against limiting childrens’ choice of reading material. She still works closely with both organizations, speaking out and getting involved when needed to support the freedom to read. In 1999 she edited an anthology of short stories, Places I Never Meant To Be: Original Stories by Censored Writers, which brought together a number of characters in remarkable situations. All the contributors, who had some of their work challenged or banned in the past, donated their royalties to the NCAC. Her concern, however, is not just an author’s freedom to write, but the freedom of young people to read and think. Judy says she laments the books that will never be written, much less read, due to the fear of ideas and a desire to control everyone’s access to information.
The Southern Miss Medallion is not the first acknowledgment for her work that Judy Blume has received. She has been recognized for her contributions to literature with the 1996 Margaret A. Edwards Award from the American Library Association, named a Library of Congress Living Legend in 2000, and in 2004 received the Medal for Distinguished Contribution to American Letters from the National Book Foundation. She advocates tirelessly for intellectual freedom through national organizations and outreach to writers, as well as founding The Kids Fund, a charitable and educational foundation. She assures aspiring writers there are “no hard and fast rules for writing, and no secret tricks… the best books come from someplace deep inside.”

For all her life, Judy Blume has been a storyteller, writing from her personal experiences and feelings. She does not try to provoke responses, but uses an honest voice to address issues and situations that she believes are important to children and teens. This voice, so elegantly stated and poignantly used, as well as her fight to preserve everyone’s right to read, is why Judy Blume is being honored with the 2009 Southern Miss Medallion for contributions to the field of children’s literature.

Some books are best read in a quiet corner. Ashley Bryan’s books seem to demand a stage, at the very least an audience. In his stories, Ashley recaptures an oral tradition by developing and giving new life to the tales and motifs collected by linguists and anthropologists around the world. He uses folk tales and spirituals to express the contributions of people of color around the world, demonstrating how cultures share similar stories. These tales bring people together, bridging the past to the present, one culture to another. Literary devices such as rhyme, rhythm, syncopation, and repetition are used to recreate the voices and music of traditional storytelling. His bold use of line and color in vibrant artwork capture the spirit and energy of his tales, while the movement and rhythm of music influence the language.

Born in 1923, Ashley is the son of Antiguan immigrants. He grew up in the Bronx during the Great Depression in a large family with two very musical parents. They welcomed friends who had also immigrated from the Caribbean and West Indies into their home, and there they would gather to play music, sing, dance and tell stories. Neither a great musician nor dancer, Ashley preferred to draw the dancing and absorb the stories and music. He created his first book in his kindergarten class at the age of five. Encouraged by his family and teachers, he chose to turn his passion into a career. He attended New York’s Cooper Union Art School, served in the U.S. Army during World War II, earned a degree from Columbia University, and was a Fulbright Scholar. He taught art for many years and eventually became the head of the art department at Dartmouth College.

Ashley Bryan has received numerous recognitions for his work. He has received three Coretta Scott King Awards for illustration, and five Coretta Scott King honors, four for illustration and one for writing. His lifetime achievement honors include an Arbuthnot Lecture, the Virginia Hamilton Award, the Laura Ingalls Wilder Award, and the Southern Miss Medallion for contributions to the field of children’s literature (1994).

Retired from Dartmouth College, Bryan continues his work on Little Cranberry Island in Maine. His autobiography, Ashley Bryan: Words to My Life’s Song, was released in 2008. A natural and energetic performer, he still enjoys entertaining children and adults with his stories and favorite poems, and he actively promotes the importance of connecting children with books worldwide.

Jan Spivey Gilchrist’s passion for painting and education has guided her career as writer and illustrator of children’s books for over a quarter of a century. A life-long resident of Chicago, she has traveled throughout the world and received national and international acclaim for her work. As a child, Jan’s family recognized her talent for art, and she was encouraged to visit museums to help develop her art abilities. She was an art educator and painter for many years before she illustrated her first children’s book, Children of Long Ago (1988), by Lessie Jones Little. Since that time Jan has illustrated or written over forty-seven books for children. Being of African decent, she recognizes the need for children of color to be presented in a positive light in the medium. Through her illustrations her books focus on self-esteem for African American children and their families. She has illustrated many books with Eloise Greenfield and together they have produced over fifteen award-winning titles. She has also worked with numerous other authors such as Lucille Clifton, Tynia Thomassie, Sharon Bell, and Rebecca Kai Dotlich.

Jan has received many accolades for her illustrations and paintings. She is the recipient of both a Coretta Scott King Award and an honor for her book illustrations. She was also recognized as a Distinguished Alumni for her contributions to children’s literature by Eastern Illinois University, and was named Illustrator of the Year by the Chicago Black Book Fair. She was inducted into the Hall of Fame for Writers of African Descent, received the Purchase Award from the DuSable Museum, and awards from the National Academic Artists Association for her paintings. Her art has been exhibited widely, including one-man exhibitions at the Art Institute of Chicago; the St. Louis Museum of Art; the Museum of the National Center of African American Artists, Boston; and the Ward-Nasse Gallery, New York.

Jan has a bachelor’s degree from Eastern Illinois University in art education, a master’s degree from the University of Northern Iowa in painting, an MFA in writing for children from Vermont College, and doctoral degree from Madison University. She is married to Dr. Kelvin Gilchrist and has two children and a granddaughter.
Eloise Greenfield

Eloise Greenfield has touched more than one generation of children with her sensitive and compelling portrayals of loving African American families, communities, and all children’s life experiences. Family solidarity, relationships, black heritage, and everyday situations all contribute to her soulful writings. Her voice has led the way to meet the needs of children of color to read about someone like them. She is a prolific author, publishing an average of a book a year since 1973. She writes in multiple genres, including picture books, biographies, poetry, and novels.

Eloise was born in North Carolina, the second of five children, and grew up in Washington, D.C. She was a shy child, preferring reading and music to group activities. She played the piano, sang in various groups, and loved to attend concerts and shows. As an adult, she planned to become an elementary school teacher, but instead took a job as a clerk-typist at the U.S. Patent Office and later became a supervisory patent assistant. As a wife and mother, Eloise began writing whimsical verses and rhymes in her spare time. Rejections did not discourage her, and after five years of determined efforts, she succeeded in having a poem published.

Eloise joined the District of Columbia Black Writers Workshop in the early 1970s and found camaraderie with other writers as well as information about publishers who might be receptive to her work. Her first picture book, Bubbles, was published in 1971. Her next book, Rosa Parks (1973), a biography of the civil rights activist for children, won the Carter G. Woodson Book Award from the National Council for the Social Studies.

Her work has earned her many other awards and honors throughout her illustrious career. This includes a Coretta Scott King Award for writing as well as four Coretta Scott King honors, a New York Times Outstanding Book of the Year citation, a Jane Addams Children’s Book Award and the Award for Excellence in Poetry for Children by the NCTE. Lifetime achievement recognitions include the Council on Interracial Books for Children Award, the National Black Child Development Institute Award, and the Mills College Award. She was also inducted into the National Literary Hall of Fame for Writers of African Descent.

Eloise still resides in Washington, D.C., and continues to participate in school and library programs and workshops for both adults and children. She is committed to provide a true account for black children, of their heritage and history, and to inspire them with resilient characters they can emulate.

John Green

John Green has followed an interesting, albeit brief, path to becoming an author. He attended Indian Springs School, an independent coeducational high school in Birmingham, and graduated from Kenyon College in 2000. After commencement he worked with teens as a chaplain at a children's hospital and then held a series of positions at Booklist, the American Library Association's book review journal. Eventually he began writing humorous pieces for WBEZ radio in Chicago and National Public Radio’s All Things Considered. His life experiences have not gone to waste; they provide John with ample insight and material for his novels. Just like E.L. Konigsberg, who received both a Newbery Medal and Newbery Honor for her first two books, John’s first novels also met with wide acclaim. Looking for Alaska (2005) was awarded the American Library Association’s Michael L. Printz Award for excellence in young adult literature, and An Abundance of Katherines (2006) received a Michael L. Printz honor and was named a Horn Book Fanfare Book of the Year. Alaska has been translated into 13 languages, and the movie rights have been purchased by Paramount. His third book, Paper Towns, which debuted in October, 2008, has received multiple starred reviews from industry publications.

John also maintains a lively online presence. In 2007 he and his brother Hank embarked on a year-long project in which they only conversed through daily video blogs posted to the public on YouTube. The project became a cultural phenomenon and the brothers developed a large, vocal, online following. When the project ended on January 1, 2008, they took their online conversation to nerdfighters.ning.com, a virtual community created by Hank. John’s personal website, www.sparksflyup.com, is full of his characteristic wit and elaborates on his personal interests, such last words and anagrams, which you can find in his book characters. The site archives a wealth of John's writings and has its own active community of followers. He regularly posts blogs (including video clips) to both sites. Born in Alabama, John now resides in Indianapolis, "by way," he says, "of New York and Chicago."
Louise Borden

Louise Borden is the author of 25 picture books, with three more currently in production. A history major in college, Borden attended Denison University in Granville, Ohio. Some of her books are nonfiction, including the biographies Sea Clocks: The Story of Longitude (2004), and Fly High! The Story of Bessie Coleman (2001), co-authored with Mary Kay Kroeger.

A recent nonfiction title and ALA Notable, The Journey that Saved Curious George: The True Wartime Escape of Margret and H.A. Rey (2005), involved detective work in France and three trips to the de Grummond Collection. The illustrations by Allan Drummond in The Journey that Saved Curious George are a vibrant echo of the artwork of Hans Rey.

A lifelong reader, Louise has spoken about the writing process in over 600 schools across the country as well as universities and conferences. In 2008, she appeared in a documentary on Dunkirk that aired on the Weather Channel. She has also been interviewed by the New York Times, USA Today, the BBC and NPR. A forthcoming interview will appear in the May, 2009, issue of The Writer magazine.

Contemporary school classrooms, the winter landscape of Holland, Boston on the eve of the American Revolution, a submarine lost on patrol in the Pacific, and the rescue of soldiers at Dunkirk appear in Borden’s books about ordinary people who become heroes. Imagination and authentic detail frame these texts of historical and contemporary realistic fiction. Good Luck, Mrs. K. (1999), the story of a third grade teacher and her class, won a Christopher Award in 2000. The Greatest Skating Race (2004), illustrated by Niki Daly, was honored with an Ohioana Award. Louise has also received an Alumni Citation from Denison and other awards in Ohio in recognition of her contributions to children's literature.

Louise and her husband Peter have three grown children and two Colorado grandchildren. They live in Cincinnati and the Washington, D.C. metro area. Her most recent book, Off to First Grade, illustrated by Joan Rankin, was released in 2008.

Yuyi Morales

The captivating artwork of author and illustrator Yuyi Morales (pronounced ju-je) can be described as a kaleidoscope of colors and textures. Born in Xalapa, Veracruz, the “Flower Garden of Mexico,” she grew up surrounded by beauty and a strong, loving family. There were magical stories told at her house and she spent hours drawing, copying family portraits and images from graphic novels, and sketching her face in front of the mirror. Despite this, she did not see herself as an artist. As a teen, her talent for swimming replaced drawing as her pastime. She trained as a competitive swimmer, earned a bachelor's degree in Physical Education and Psychology from the Universidad Veracruzana and worked as a swimming coach. In 1994 she immigrated to the United States with her newborn son, Kelly, and her husband, Tim. The transition was lonely as Yuyi, who spoke very little English, moved in with her mother-in-law who spoke no Spanish. She found that children’s books from the public library offered her an opportunity to practice English, and she enrolled in writing classes so she could write stories like the ones she enjoyed reading. She also bought art supplies and learned to paint by studying the picture books from which she and her son took so much pleasure.

Her literary career began in 1998, when she and a small group of friends founded the Revisionaries writers group. In 2000 she won the Society of Children's Book Writers and Illustrators Don Freeman Grant for promising artists, and she began illustrating her first picture book, Todas las Buenas Manos, written by Isabel Campoy. She attained national recognition in 2004 when she won both a Pura Belpre honor (for illustration in Harvesting Hope, the Story of Cesar Chavez, by Kathleen Krull) and the Pura Belpre Medal for Just a Minute: A Trickster Tale and Counting Book, which she also wrote. Her work has received numerous other accolades including The Americas Award from the University of Wisconsin, Milwaukee, two Tomás Rivera awards from Texas State University, and placed on multiple best books lists. In 2008 and 2009, respectively, she was presented with two more Pura Belpre Medals for Los Gatos Black on Halloween, written by Marisa Montes, and Just in Case: A Trickster Tale and Spanish Alphabet Book. Yuyi now has the distinction of being the first person to be recognized four times by the Pura Belpre Committee. Her new book, My Abuelita, written by Tony Johnston, is due out in September, 2009.
Arthur Yorinks began drawing as a young child with his mother, Shirley, who was a fashion illustrator. By the time he reached junior high school, he was collaborating with friends on comic books, an early example of his extraordinary ability to work with others to create seamless works of literature, music, and theater productions. He also studied classical piano and credits his piano instructor, Robert Bedford, with teaching him what it means to be an artist. After high school, he took up ballet and theater and became a member of the American Mime Theater, where he wrote, acted, and taught for ten years. He says that writing for the mime theater taught him to write picture books because it required him to create a story without depending upon dialogue.

Though he refers to himself as shy, Arthur was courageous enough at the age of sixteen to show up at the home of Maurice Sendak. He never actually knocked, but had turned away just as Sendak opened the door. Arthur boldly asked Sendak to read and comment on his stories, and the two eventually became friends. It was Sendak who recommended that Richard Egielski illustrate Arthur’s first picture book. Yorinks and Egielski published Sid and Sol in 1977, and went on to collaborate on many other titles, including Louis the Fish (1980), It Happened in Pinsk (1983), and Hey, Al (1986), which won a Caldecott honor. He has also written stories illustrated by Sendak, William Steig, Mort Drucker, and David Small, among others. His wife is also an artist and together they published Quack! To the Moon and Home Again in 2003.

The scope of Arthur Yorinks’s artistic ability extends well beyond children’s books. In addition to writing over thirty books for children, Arthur has had nine one-act plays produced, written three opera librettos, and created a screenplay for Sid and Sol. He is the director of and a writer for the yorinks theater group (formerly The Night Kitchen Radio Theater), a venture inspired by his fascination with the relationship between sound and live performance. In pursuit of what he calls “a new theater of sound,” Arthur has written and directed numerous original audio plays that have been performed at the Kennedy Center and the New Victory Theater in New York City, as well as being broadcast nationwide over XM Radio.

Arthur’s most recent children’s books include the 2006 bestseller Mommy? and What a Trip! (2008), another collaboration with Richard Egielski. He still lives in New York City and divides his time between his theater group and serving as the artistic director for The Jerome L. Greene Performance Space at WNYC radio.
Ezra Jack Keats (1916-1983) is internationally recognized as one of the most influential creators of picture books in the 20th century. He was author and illustrator of more than 20 books and provided the illustrations for an additional 63 titles in a distinguished career that spanned four decades. The Caldecott-winning The Snowy Day (Viking, 1962) was revolutionary by sympathetically dealing with the experiences of an African-American child. A multi-racial and urban world was beautifully reflected in many of his other books. Although comfortable and adept with many mediums, Keats is justly remembered as a true master of collage. His technique of using such favorite characters as Peter, Louie, and Willie in a series of stories is just one reason why the stories of Ezra Jack Keats continue to be loved by children of all ages.

The University of Southern Mississippi is very proud that Ezra Jack Keats was the 12th recipient of the Southern Miss Medallion for outstanding contributions to children’s literature. In 1985, the Ezra Jack Keats Foundation established the Ezra Jack Keats Lectureship at the annual Children’s Book Festival. Since then, the lectures have been given by the following distinguished individuals:

The Fay B. Kaigler-Ruth Lamont Award

The first presentation of the Kaigler-Lamont Award was made in 1998. The generous financial support of Fay Kaigler of McComb, Miss., has made the award possible. Miss Kaigler is well-known for her love of children and devoted herself for many years as an elementary school teacher to enhancing books and reading in the lives of children. Her students were soon hooked on books. In retirement, she continues to promote books and reading in her local public library. Her dear friend, Ruth Lamont, who for many years was a successful school librarian in Baton Rouge, La., shares her passion for making books integral to children’s lives.

The Kaigler-Lamont Award recognizes distinguished accomplishments in promoting children’s reading by librarians and teachers in Mississippi schools and by children’s librarians in the public libraries of Mississippi.

The de Grummond Children’s Literature Collection

The de Grummond Children’s Literature Collection is one of North America’s leading research collections in the field of children’s literature. While the collection has many strengths, the main focus is on American and British children’s literature, historical as well as contemporary.

The collection holds original materials and published works in the McCain Library and Archives on the Hattiesburg campus of The University of Southern Mississippi.

The collection is named for Dr. Lena Y. de Grummond, who founded the collection in 1966. She assembled materials that were sent by contributors from around the world. More than 1,200 artists, illustrators, and collectors have generously donated books and original materials to the collection.

A major acquisition is that of the Ezra Jack Keats collection. The original artwork, typescripts, dummies, and preliminary sketches for 36 books by the Caldecott Award-winning author/illustrator complement the archives of his personal and professional papers already housed in the de Grummond Collection.

Please visit the de Grummond exhibit room located on the 2nd floor of Cook Library, which contains highlights from the de Grummond Children’s Literature Collection as well as from the past 41 years of the Fay B. Kaigler Children’s Book Festival.

The History of the Children's Book Festival
at The University of Southern Mississippi

In 1968, Dr. Warren Tracy, Chairman of the Library Science Department and University Librarian for The University of Southern Mississippi, saw his vision for a children’s literature conference come to life. The university, under the leadership of Dr. William D. McCain, and the Library Science department hosted the Conference on the Writing, Illustrating, and Publishing of Children’s Books, the first of what soon became the annual Children’s Book Festival.

Two years earlier, Dr. Lena de Grummond, Professor of Library Science, with Dr. Tracy’s blessing, had begun to procure early children’s books to support the Library Science program. She spent countless hours writing to authors and illustrators of contemporary children’s books to acquire original material for the library. Contributions of artwork and manuscripts flowed in from across the United States and Canada. Today, more than 1,200 authors and illustrators are represented in the de Grummond Children’s Literature Collection.

In his original vision for a children’s literature conference, Dr. Tracy saw the conference as a way to highlight the de Grummond Collection. That first conference in May 1968 was designed to announce the opening of the special children’s literature collection. Librarians, teachers, parents, and other adults interested in promoting children’s literature were invited for three days of exhibits, workshops, and panel discussions led by publishers and editors of children’s books. Dr. Francis Lander Spain, past president of the American Library Association and former head of the children’s department of the New York Public Library, spoke at the first evening session, which was open to the public.

In 1969, the conference became known as the “Children’s Book Festival” and included an event that became an honored tradition – presentation of The University of Southern Mississippi Medallion, an award for distinguished service in the field of children’s literature. A committee of professionals associated with children’s literature selects the recipient each year. Unique among literary prizes, the medallion is awarded for an individual’s total body of work, rather than for one particular work, and each medallion is different. Cast in silver for the recipient and for permanent display in the de Grummond Collection and in bronze for wider distribution, a profile of the honoree is engraved on the face, or obverse, of the medallion, and an illustration from the honoree’s work is engraved on the reverse side. Since the first award to author Lois Lenski at the Second Annual Children’s Book Festival, the Southern Miss Medallion has been presented to an outstanding array of children’s authors and illustrators.

Throughout the 1970s and 1980s, the festival came into its own. Dr. Tracy continued to attract out-of-state writers and illustrators, enhancing the festival’s reputation. From 1977 to 1980, Dr. Onva K. Boshears served as director of the festival. Dr. Jeannine Laughlin-Porter assumed the directorship in 1980. That was the year Ezra Jack Keats, internationally acclaimed author and illustrator for children, was invited to accept the Southern Miss Medallion. Following his visit, Keats became one of the strongest supporters of the Children’s Book Festival and the de Grummond Collection. Since his death, the university has acquired his personal and professional papers, original artwork, typescripts, and dummies and preliminary sketches for 36 of his books. The materials are now housed in the de Grummond Collection. In 1985, the Keats Foundation established an Ezra Jack Keats lectureship, with Barbara Cooney as the artist honoree and Brian Alderson as the first Keats lecturer. In years since, the lecture has become a highly regarded feature of the festival. Children’s Authors Speak, a collection of speeches compiled by Dr.
Laughlin-Porter and Sherry Laughlin, was published in 1993 and includes a number of Keats lectures, as well as speeches by Southern Miss Medallion honorees.

Dr. Boshears, during Dr. Laughlin-Porter’s directorship of the festival, continued to work closely with her and chaired the Medallion Selection Committee through spring 1993. In 1994, he resumed directorship of the festival and continued as director until his retirement in 2001. Dr. Rosemary Chance, an assistant professor in the School of Library and Information Science, became the director of the festival in 2002. Upon Dr. Chance’s retirement in 2004, Dr. Catharine Bomhold became the director of the Fay B. Kaigler Children’s Book Festival.

In 1998, Miss Fay B. Kaigler, a retired elementary school teacher and native Mississippian, generously funded the first Kaigler-Lamont Award to be given for distinguished service to children by a librarian or teacher. On December 5, 2001, the festival was renamed in honor of Miss Kaigler, who contributed a planned gift to the festival. Miss Kaigler, a longtime supporter of the festival and the university, taught in the public schools of California and Mississippi for 33 years, instilling the importance of reading in her students. She first attended the festival at the invitation of her friend Ruth Lamont a children’s librarian from Baton Rouge. Over the years the two traveled to Hattiesburg each spring to participate in the festival. Although she is a graduate of Louisiana State University, Miss Kaigler’s love of reading and children drew her to Southern Miss through the festival. Her gift to the university will continue the festival’s tradition of encouraging writers to strive for excellence in children’s literature and of providing information to teachers and librarians.

From its modest beginning of 100 participants, the Children’s Book Festival has grown to hundreds of participants representing 22 states. Originally organized to promote the de Grummond Collection, the festival has come into its own. Both the festival and the de Grummond Collection continue to evolve together for the advancement of children’s literature, and, year after year, enthusiastic supporters of children’s literature come together to celebrate the joy of children’s books.
